Democrats weigh their next move to try to rein in Bush

By BRIAN KNOWLTON

Senate Democrats said Sunday that they would try moving next to restrict the president's authority to wage war, forcing American troops to shift from combat missions to a supporting role. Left, Senator Harry Reid of Nevada, the majority leader.

Opinion

Oh what a malleable war

The team that once sold Americans smoking guns in the shape of mushroom clouds is losing its touch.

Language: Tracking the source of the 'third rail' warning

Quote of the Day

“A majority of the United States Senate just voted on Iraq, and a majority of the United States Senate is against the escalation in Iraq.”

Senator Harry Reid of Nevada, the majority leader, speaking about the rare Saturday session vote that fell four short of the 60 votes needed to force an Iraq debate.
